1. The first step in the process of writing a research paper is to choose a topic. This is often the most difficult part, as you need to find a subject that interests you and is also relevant to your course. Once you have chosen a topic, you need to do some preliminary research to see what has already been written about it. This will help you to narrow down your topic and to identify the key issues that you need to address in your paper.

2. The next step is to gather your sources. This involves finding books, articles, and other materials that you can use to support your arguments. It is important to be selective in your choice of sources, as you do not want to include too much information. You should also be aware of the reliability of your sources, and should avoid using sources that are biased or outdated. Once you have gathered your sources, you need to read them carefully and take notes on the key points that you want to use in your paper.

3. The third step is to write your paper. This involves organizing your ideas into a coherent structure and writing them up in a clear and concise manner. You should start by writing an introduction that states your topic and your main argument. This is followed by several paragraphs of text, each of which should focus on a specific point. You should use your sources to support your arguments, and should cite them appropriately. Finally, you should write a conclusion that summarizes your main points and restates your main argument.

Handwritten text, possibly a list or notes, written in a cursive script. The text is mostly illegible due to the dense and overlapping nature of the handwriting.
